IMMERSION SUITS FOR DUNKED FLIERS—All U.S. navy fliers, stationed at the reserve air station in Squantum, Mass., must wear the new immersion suits when they take to the air over northeast waters. These immersion suits, which weigh but 20 pounds, are made of rubber and nylon, and seal the body completely, thereby retaining the warmth of the body in icy waters. When wearing these new "Mae Wests" the man can float in the water quite comfortably and be warm enough to give him a better chance of rescue in event of accident. Without such equipment, a man can freeze to death in icy waters in about five minutes. The suit slips easily over the flier's regular clothing. They aren't cumbersome or bulky, and when not in use can be rolled up into a small bundle. Here, Lieut. George Spence "coolly" smokes a cigar as he relaxes in the icy water. Quite comfortably, too, he says.

THE SANDS ARE RUNNING OUT

At the opening of the present session of the House of Commons last December, the prime minister took occasion to express grave misgivings as to international affairs. Mr. King had recently returned from his visit overseas and, presumably, was given access to sources of information unavailable to an average person. While no specific problem was touched upon by the prime minister, it is open to those who study world affairs to make some speculations of their own. From this it would appear that there are two major questions at issue today: one is Greece, the other is Palestine.

Judging from the attitude of the United States government, both financially and from certain military measures, it may be assumed that the first question—that of Greece—is settled so far as a matter of policy is concerned.

There remain Palestine; perhaps the most explosive issue facing the world at the moment. There are two main factors here, well known to all who follow the news. The first is the unalterable policy of Britain, which has been the country by May 1948; the second, that the United Nations, having decided to partition the country, have no means at present of enforcing that decision in face of Arab hostility.

In considering this question, it might be as well to identify those who have the greatest interest outside of the Jews and Arabs. Indubitably, they are three great powers: Britain, Russia, and the United States.

To take the case of Britain: It is possible that she might have stayed with the mandate had the provisions of regulated entry been observed by the Jews. Even so, hard feelings have been aroused among the Arabs by the sale of lands by members of their own race to Jewish settlers.

International Jewry, however, with its backing of wealth forces the pace, and the government of Britain has washed its hands of the matter. It is true the United Nations have negative the setting up of a Jewish as well as an Arab militia, as they have also cleared their opposition to the presence of the United Nations partition committee in the country any earlier than two weeks before May 15th.

It is obvious that the Jews are obvious: Britain has no intention of becoming entangled in what might become a worse situation than that of Greece.

If it be asked, "Why not an international force provided by those nations which voted for partition?" The answer is given by the press of the United States. Fear of Russian penetration—the old world fear: for preponderance in the Middle East is the goal of two opposing interests—and the price is!

This accounts for what seems to be a policy of drift on the part of the United Nations. The sands of time are running out and the situation is going on, and the common man may well come to the conclusion that the Rt. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King should stop his wailing and wailing his misgivings on the immediate future of international relations.

Down in Ottawa there is talk going on about establishing a fact finding commission to enquire into the causes of the high cost of living. Subject to previous experience, it may be months before any results are achieved by it of any benefit to the public. Meanwhile, nothing has been done. The prices board has fixed a maximum price on cabbage! This reminds us of an incident occurring in the British parliament during the dismal thirties. A grave debate was in progress dealing with the slump in foreign trade, when the then prime minister arose and assured the House that matters were improving and solemnly announced that the export of broccoli was increasing rapidly!

VITAL QUESTION

Prime Minister Attlee has demanded the half-way position for which his Government is sometimes criticised. We represent, he said, neither "watered down Capitalism" nor "watered down Communism."

"Our task is to work out a system of a new and challenging kind which combines individual freedom with a planned economy, democracy with social justice."

An economic plan, of course, is intended to disperse the national resources to the best interest of all the people—to distribute fairly, or to raise scarcity. But so plan can serve people's interests. It will give an interested man to the plan.

Experience under both Socialism and Capitalism proves that a man who can win money fairly, roasts in their spirit of national service, and from their fear and greed—free them to give their best—do more for native economy than any frame of a plan.

Social justice, too, calls for moral qualities rather than political beliefs. The man who is socially just, is the man who gives himself in selfless service. He does not depend on his allegiance to God than to the Liberal, Conservative and Labor parties.

Where a man is spiritually guided rather than naturally inclined in his political affections are quite immaterial. Any unselfish Socialist guided by God, will do more for his people and for social justice than any selfish power-hungry Capitalist. And vice versa. The only reason a Communist cannot do as much is that he leaves room to spiritual character out of the picture.

The vital question now face to face is—"What are your spiritual and moral practices?"—not "What are your economic theories and political beliefs?"

Production and Costs In Dairying

Lethbridge Experimental Station

Weekly Letter.

Seldom, it ever, have costs of dairy production been as high as they are at present. That being the case, careful study is being made during these costs should be warranted. The individual producer has little or no control over the costs of equipment and feed, or other items that go to make up his expenditures. Therefore, the only practical solution appears to be in improving efficiency.

One of the factors of cost is the feed used. Any reduction in this factor could lower overall costs. One of the most effective means of reducing feed costs is to reduce the feed per individual animal may lead to reduced production and lower profits. The alternative, is to make certain that all animals use their feed efficiently. This point has been stressed again and again, but improvements still are possible in most respects.

Experimental Station, Lethbridge, had with show on possibility in direction. Cow No. 1 produced 29, 310 pounds of milk, and No. 2 produced 7,007 pounds of milk in their respective lactations completed in 1946. No. 1 consumed 4,038 pounds of concentrate and 10,895 pounds of hay, compared to 10,351 pounds and 7,310 pounds for No. 2. The cost of feed for No. 1 was $1,040.00, and for No. 2 it was $753.34. But despite the greater feed intake, No. 1 returned $251.40 more in milk, as compared to only $48.41 for cow No. 2.

When considered in terms of feed cost of producing a unit of product, cow No. 2 had a feed cost of 80c per 100 pounds of milk and cow No. 1 had a cost of 10.8c. Per pound of butterfat, the costs were 18 cents and 25 cents respectively.

The dairy indicates that total production has a very direct bearing on the cost of producing each hundred pounds of milk and product of butterfat. Greater attention to breeding out low producing cows can do much to improve profits. This implies the need for keeping production records and making a little extra time it can pay big dividends.

Efficiency of production must be the watchword in all phases of production.

Vegetable canning plants in the big cities of southern Alberta had an output of 3,000,000 cases last year, and paid $100,000 to produce. The cost of the product was valued at $3,000,000.
